

Dr. Carsten Baessmann is responsible for the development of new mass spectrometry based solutions in the applied markets. His responsibility includes the management of collaborations with leading researchers in the fields of forensics and clinical research as well as food and environmental analysis. He is also in charge of driving the necessary hardware and software development. Dr. Baessmann received his Ph. D. in physical chemistry from the Technical University Munich, Germany. Since over 20 years he served Bruker in various management positions in R&D and applications development.